COURSE DESCRIPTION
The impacts of today’s critical challenges such as, climate change, water security, affordable housing, and spatial inequality, etc., are often felt beyond the geographical or disciplinary domain of a single agency. However, institutional, political, and technical barriers often limit the degree to which multiple agencies – both public and private – cooperate in addressing these challenges. In this course, we will explore how planners work in fragmented environments and how they can facilitate better decision-making, particularly at the metropolitan or regional scale.

We will consider questions, such as: Which issues require a regional response? Absent institutional mechanisms, how do stakeholders interact with regard to these issues? When are collaborative approaches more common? Who are its common supporters and opponents? What are some of the most innovative approaches? How should the approaches vary from growing regions to declining ones? And, how effective have past approaches been and what have been their unintended consequences? The students will also learn about creating and analyzing regional plans, and about tools commonly employed by regional agencies.

The course serves as an advanced elective for students interested in land use and transportation planning as well as those pursuing the sustainable design and development concentrations. To students interested in other concentrations or in research, this course will help develop an understanding of how regional planning intersects with their area of interest, and of many important and unresolved research questions, respectively. To non-planning majors, it will also provide an exposure to urban planning theories and practices through the lens of regional issues.

COURSE FORMAT
This is a seminar course. The students are expected to prepare for class sessions, submit reading summaries, and actively engage in discussions. The course is loosely organized in three parts, (1) regional institutions and frameworks, (2) regional planning practices, and (3) trends and prospects.

READINGS
The readings are taken from a number of books and academic journals. Most of the materials are supplied in electronic format to registered students via Compass. You will, however, need to purchase the following book:

ASSIGNMENTS AND GRADING

Early in the semester you will identify an ongoing or recent regional planning project. In making this choice, you should consider both a region of interest and the nature of the recipient projects. You will then craft three brief memos that cover the key issues in your region, how the regional plan addresses it, and your critique of the process in light of the broader regional planning literature, respectively. The memos and accompanying presentations will provide you an opportunity review planning documents, explore computational tools, and hone your analytical and communication skills. The memos will build on one another and detailed instructions on each will be provided. The following represent the share of each deliverable’s score with respect to the total grade:

- Memo#1 and presentation – 15%
- Memo#2 and presentation – 15%
- Memo#3 and presentation – 20%

You will also submit written reactions to readings on Illinois Compass prior to each class. These are expected to be a very brief synthesis (about 200-300 words) of your reaction to the overall set of readings for the session (i.e. do not submit reading summaries or write reactions to every individual piece of reading). Ideas for what you might address include the following: what you like/dislike about the readings; identify some aspect of the readings that made an impression on you (new fact, enlightening observation, new twist to an old idea, writing style, etc.); or note something you did not understand. You should include two-to-three questions you would like to ask to the class. The reactions will be due 30 minutes prior to the class session (i.e. at 12:30 PM) on Illinois Compass’ “Discussion Board” tab. Summaries and class participation will have the following share of the final course score:

- Clear and concise written summaries – 20%
- Thoughtful participation in discussions – 30%

Attendance is mandatory. For unavoidable circumstances, please give me an early notice if possible. Late submissions will incur a one-letter grade penalty for every 24-hour delay.

ACADEMIC INTEGRITY

Please be aware of the university guidelines regarding academic integrity, which can be found under Article 1, Part 4 of the student code (http://www.admin.uiuc.edu/policy/code/). Academic dishonesty includes such things as cheating, inappropriate use of university equipment/material, fabrication of information, plagiarism (presenting someone else’s work from any source as your own such as copying someone else’s post), and so on. All forms of academic dishonesty will be reported to the student’s home department, the College of Fine and Applied Arts, and to the Senate Committee on Student Discipline.
